AMENDED MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

I. BACKGROUND

The petitioner in this habeas corpus proceeding, Johnny Miller, is an inmate in the custody of the Pennsylvania Department of Corrections, and is currently housed at the State Correctional Institution at Mahanoy, in Frackville, Pennsylvania. Miller is serving a life sentence that was imposed following his conviction of first-degree murder in the Dauphin County Court of Common Pleas. Miller was 16 years old at the time of the offense.

Miller commenced the above-captioned action by filing a petition for habeas corpus on May 30, 2013. In the petition, Miller argues that his sentence of life imprisonment for murder committed when he was a juvenile is unconstitutional in light of the Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. ___, 132 S. Ct. 2455 (2012), in which the Supreme Court held that sentencing schemes involving mandatory life imprisonment for those under the age of 18 at the time of their crimes violate the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishments.

On June 7, 2013, the district court issued an order dismissing the petition, without prejudice, on the grounds that the petitioner had not exhausted his claims through proceedings under Pennsylvania's Post-Conviction Relief Act, 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 9541-9546. (Doc. 4.) In a memorandum that accompanied the order, the district court did not directly address whether it may be appropriate to stay consideration of Miller's federal petition pending the exhaustion of his PCRA claims, and instead found the petition to be premature, and ordered that it be dismissed without prejudice. (Doc. 3.)

On June 20, 2013, the petitioner filed a pro se motion for reconsideration of the order dismissing his petition, and additionally moved the Court to stay consideration of his federal habeas petition while his PCRA claims were adjudicated in state court. (Doc. 5.) On the same day, the district court entered a verbal order reopening the case, and referred the case to the undersigned for pre-trial management. (Civ. A. No. 3:13-CV-1452, June 20, 2013 verbal order.) Also on June 20, 2013, the Federal Public Defender for the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania was appointed pursuant to Standing Order 13-6 to represent Miller and other similarly situated petitioners who had filed petitions based upon the holding in Miller v. Alabama. (Doc. 6.)

On July 3, 2013, Miller's newly appointed counsel filed a motion to withdraw the pro se motion for reconsideration that had been filed, and requested that the Court grant Miller's motion to stay and hold in abeyance the federal habeas corpus proceedings so that Miller could exhaust his claims in state court. (Doc. 7.) The Dauphin County District Attorney, representing the respondents, concurred in the motion. (Id.)

Following this procedural history, and to ensure clarity of the record in this case, we observe that the June 7 order that initially dismissed the petition without prejudice (Doc. 4.) was effectively vacated by the district court's June 20 verbal order reopening the case and referring it to the undersigned. Accordingly, the petitioner's motion to withdraw his motion for reconsideration of the district court's order was rendered moot by virtue of the order reopening the case, and the petitioner's motion for reconsideration had no relevance to or effect upon the petition itself. Instead, the motion remained relevant only to Miller's request that the Court issue an order staying these proceedings pending the outcome of Miller's state-court litigation.

We have now considered Miller's concurred-in motion to stay and hold in abeyance these federal proceedings pending exhaustion of his state claims, and find the motion should be granted, as explained below.

II. DISCUSSION

State prisoners who turn to the federal courts seeking habeas corpus relief are often called upon to chart a careful course between competing procedural shoals. Prisoners who file prematurely may run afoul of one of the statutory prerequisites to a state prisoner seeking habeas corpus relief in federal court, "exhaust[ion of] the remedies available in the courts of the State." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1)(A). Prisoners who delay in filing may find that the one-year statute of limitations applicable to habeas petitions under 28 U.S.C. § 2244, now bars their access to federal court. Thus, prisoners often must endeavor to steer a course between the Scylla of § 2254's exhaustion requirement and the Charybdis of the bar of the statute of limitations.

In these proceedings, each of the petitioners is an inmate in the custody of the Pennsylvania Department of Corrections, and each is serving a sentence of life imprisonment that was imposed after the petitioner was convicted of murder. Each petitioner has filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2254, arguing that his or her sentence of life imprisonment is unconstitutional under the Eighth And Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, in light of the United States Supreme Court’s holding in Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. ____, 132 S. Ct. 2455 (2012). We are overseeing pre-trial management in each of these cases.

Each of the petitioners has moved the Court to stay and hold these proceedings in abeyance pending the outcome of post-conviction applications brought pursuant to Pennsylvania’s Post-Conviction Relief Act, 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §§ 9541-9546 (PCRA), all of which are currently pending in Pennsylvania state courts. (Doc. 7.) The petitioners seek to stay their federal proceedings while they complete the process of exhausting their claims in state court, in order to guard against the possibility that their federal habeas petitions could later be found to be untimely under the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA).

The AEDPA imposes a one-year statute of limitations on applications for writs of habeas corpus. Under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A), the statute of limitations begins to run from “the date on which the judgment became final by the conclusion of direct review or the expiration of the time for seeking such review.” At the same time, the AEDPA obligates petitioners to exhaust their claims in state court before proceeding with a habeas corpus petition in federal court, but provides that the limitations period is tolled during the pendency of a “properly filed” state post-conviction petition. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2).

When a petitioner files a petition which contains unexhausted claims, the court has several courses available to it. First, the court can dismiss the petition without prejudice, so that the petitioner can either return to state court and totally exhaust his claims, or proceed in federal court on a petition which raises only wholly exhausted issues. Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509 (1982). This total exhaustion approach facilitates the important goals of federalism and comity that are essential to the exhaustion rule, and allows for complete legal and factual development of these cases in the state legal system before petitions are presented in federal court. However, because strict compliance with this total exhaustion rule can create procedural dilemmas for some petitioners who may be unable to fully exhaust state remedies on petitions before the one-year statute of limitations prescribed for state habeas petitions elapses, the courts have adopted another procedure which may be employed in a limited number of cases, a “stay and abeyance” procedure in which the federal habeas petition is stayed pending exhaustion of state remedies by the petitioner. Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269 (2005). According to the Supreme Court:

[S]tay and abeyance should be available only in limited circumstances. Because granting a stay effectively excuses a petitioner's failure to present his claims first to the state courts, stay and abeyance is only appropriate when the district court determines there was good cause for the petitioner's failure to exhaust his claims first in state court. Moreover, even if a petitioner had good cause for that failure, the district court would abuse its discretion if it were to grant him a stay when his unexhausted claims are plainly meritless.

Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. at 277. Therefore, in order to qualify for a stay and abeyance a petitioner should “satisf[y] the three requirements for a stay as laid out in Rhines: good cause, potentially meritorious claims, and a lack of intentionally dilatory litigation tactics.” Heleva v. Brooks, 581 F.3d 187, 192 (3d Cir.2009).

As noted, each of these cases has been brought following the Supreme Court’s decision in Miller, which was issued on June 25, 2012. In each instance, the petitioners have moved to stay and hold in abeyance their federal habeas petitions in order to guard against the possibility that Pennsylvania state courts hold that Miller is not retroactively applicable, and, therefore, that the PCRA petitions were not “properly filed” so as to toll the one-year limitations period. See Pace v. DiGuglielmo, 544 U.S. 408, 416-17 (2005) (holding that time limits are filing conditions, and where state court rejected petitioner’s PCRA petition as untimely, it was not “properly filed,” and, therefore, he was not entitled to statutory tolling of his federal habeas petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2)).

Furthermore, it is noteworthy that in each instance, the respondents have concurred in the stay request. This concurrence reflects a recognition by state authorities that the state courts should, in the first instance, have the opportunity to address this issue as matter of state law. Adopting this course has merits on several scores. First, it may make federal proceedings unnecessary. In any event, this course will promote judicial economy if federal habeas corpus proceedings later prove necessary once the application of Miller to these petitioners has been fully addressed by the state courts.

In Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269 (2005), the Supreme Court held that a district court may stay, in limited circumstances, enter an order staying and holding in abeyance a petition for writ of habeas corpus, provided that there is good cause to do so, that the petition raises potentially meritorious claims, and there is an absence of intentionally dilatory litigation tactics. Id. at 278; see also Heleva v. Brooks, 581 F.3d 187, 192 (3d Cir. 2009). Upon consideration, we find that all three of these considerations are satisfied, and that there is good cause to issue orders staying and holding in abeyance each of these habeas proceedings while the petitioners complete the process of exhausting their claims in Pennsylvania state courts. Furthermore, we observe that in each of these cases, it appears that the respondents have concurred in the requested relief. In addition, we note that this course of action has been expressly adopted by judges of this Court in other cases in which state prisoner petitioners have recently filed claims based upon the Supreme Court's decision in See, e.g., Tarselli v. Folino, No. 4:CV-13-939, 2013 WL 2177769, at *3 (M.D. Pa. May 20, 2013)(Brann, J.) (granting a stay in the context of Miller exhaustion); accord Klinger v. Walsh, et al., No. 4:CV-13-1537 (Rep't & Rec., June 14, 2013, Blewitt, Magis. J.).

Finally, we note that, unlike a decision dismissing a petition as unexhausted, “motions to stay litigation . . . , are non-dispositive motions under Rule 72(a). See, e.g., Gonzalez v. GE Group Adm'rs, Inc., 321 F.Supp.2d 165, 166 (D.Mass.2004); Torrance v. Aames Funding Corp., 242 F.Supp.2d 862, 865 (D.Or.2002); All Saint's Brands, Inc. v. Brewery Group Den., A/S, 57 F.Supp.2d 825, 833 (D.Minn.1999); Herko v. Metro. Life Ins. Co., 978 F.Supp. 141, 142 n. 1 (W.D.N.Y.1997).” PowerShare, Inc. v. Syntel, Inc., 597 F.3d 10, 14 (1st Cir. 2010). Therefore, the decision to grant, deny or lift a stay rests within the jurisdiction and sound discretion of a United States Magistrate Judge under 28 U.S.C. §636(b)(1)(A), subject to appeal to the district court for an abuse of that discretion. Touton, S.A. v. M.V. Rizcun Trader, 30 F. Supp. 2d 508, 510 (E.D. Pa. 1998)(“[T]he Court finds that neither the grant of the stay of proceedings . . . , nor the lift of said stay, constituted ‘injunctive relief’ in excess of the Magistrate Judge's authority under § 636(b)(1)(A).”).

In this case, having found that the relevant factors enunciated in Rhines are fully satisfied, further finding that the respondents concur in staying these cases, and mindful that “when an outright dismissal could jeopardize the timeliness of a collateral attack, a stay is the only appropriate course of action,” Crews v. Horn, 360 F.3d 146, 154 (3d Cir. 2004), we will grant the motions to stay these proceedings.

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT the petitioner’s motion to reconsider (Doc. 5.), is deemed moot to the extent it requests the district court to reconsider its order dismissing the petition, and the petitioner’s unopposed motion to stay (Doc. 7.) is GRANTED and this case is STAYED pending further order of the Court.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT within 30 days of the termination of the petitioner’s related state-court PCRA proceedings, the petitioner shall file a written status report with the Court to inform the Court of the outcome of his state-court proceedings, and shall include a copy of the relevant state-court dispositions.

So ordered this 11th day of July 2013.
